INTERVENTION FROM WASHINGTON.

Character of the Latest Advices from Mexico.

Personal Difficulty Between Senators Douglas and Fitch.

THE WAR OF THE ROSES COMMENCED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, Jan. 23.

The latest private intelligence from Mexico received here from highly intelligent and responsible sources, is very unfavorable for the Liberal Party, who continue to gain ground in the good will of the people. The most perfect unanimity of feeling and purpose exist among their leaders, who are determined to listen to no compromise whatever, but to insist upon the establishment of the Constitution of 1857, and the maintenance of the church property.

The revenues of the Church are estimated to be worth between two and three hundred millions of dollars. Their appropriation by the State Governors, will not only give it at once the means of establishing a firm and stable Government, but will also result in a large addition of revenue to the Treasury by subjecting it to taxation. Such a policy, combining the masses of the people impoverished by their present tax burdens, cannot fail to secure for itself decided popularity.

Our Administration seem clearly that it is the Liberal Party from whom we can expect stability enough in the Government to give any encouragement to the contingent recognition of a treaty. Hence Mr. Buchanan pays no attention whatever to the programmes of the Zulogaga, Robles or Miramon. He awaits the establishment of the Constitutional Government, but couldn't think of assuming the responsibility of precipitating that result by prompt recognition. He is confident that at some time the oyster will be opened, forgetting apparently that his failure to manifest any practical sympathy with the Constitutionalists will justly entitle him only to a shell.

The great drawback of the Liberals, heretofore, has been the want of arms and ammunition. I understand that recent arrangements have been made in this country, by means of which this difficulty is being speedily removed.

There was a lively time in Senate Executive Session on Friday afternoon. Mr. DOUGLAS, in the course of a debate upon the character of some of Mr. BUCHANAN's appointees, stated that of fifty thousand documents which he sent to his constituents through the mails, none ever reached its destination! He said, further, that he would give $100 for every copy that must be shown to have been delivered.

The nomination pending was that of PORTER as Collector, at Toledo, Ohio. FITCH opposed it, because the man displaced was his friend, and he charged that the place was unsuitable for the place. He intimated that if the Administration wanted to make an appointment in him, he had no objection.

DOUGLAS took an opportunity to comment upon the Illinois appointments at Chicago and elsewhere, to the vacancies made by sacrificing his friends. Referring to Isaac Cook, of Chicago, he made specific charges against the appointees generally in Illinois, which he denounced as incompetent and corrupt. The chief charge made by DOUGLAS was that all of the officers of the Administration in Illinois were a set of political scoundrels. The second charge was that the postmaster of Chicago, ISAAC COOK, was disposed little better than a common thief; that he had opened his correspondence during the late contest, and that he (DOUGLAS) had sent to the Chicago Post-Office fifty thousand documents having his franks, which had never reached their destination. Senator GWIN had written him that letters addressed to him at Chicago, had been opened and never received, and intimated that they were abstracted by Cook, the Postmaster. DOUGLAS stated that Mr. FITCH had made no remarks made by him in the course of the debate. (DOUGLAS.) I know more of Illinois politics and Illinois men than Mr. FITCH. (DOUGLAS.)

These allegations FITCH, as his son was one of the appointees, felt called upon to deny the general charge as untrue, and said that DOUGLAS knew it to be so. DOUGLAS admitted that there were exceptions to the general charge, and intimated that FITCH's son was an exception.

The charges against Cook, FITCH said that DOUGLAS had on a previous occasion, had made similar charges against Cook, and pledged his word and his honor that if the Senate gave him time to procure official papers, he would prove them; that time was granted him, and he came before the Senate with his papers, but failed to prove disproved every charge he had made, and therefore, he could not expect the Senate to believe his unsustained assertions.

The answer in reference to the charge against FITCH is alleged that DOUGLAS remained silent.

DOUGLAS' last statement, FITCH rejoined that he never used such language, or entertained such sentiments, and that he requested DOUGLAS, when he alluded to him, to confine himself to the truth. During the course of FITCH's remarks, which were very severe, he was repeatedly called to order.

He retained fearfully and bitterly, and was shocked by the Chair, at general series of [illegible] and was proceeding, when he was called to order. Mr. BROWN subsequently moved that DOUGLAS be permitted to resume his remarks in order. In reference to this motion, Mr. DAVIS, laboring under great excitement, reproached severely the course of debate assumed by DOUGLAS, but although not offensively personal, subsequently apologized for his undue excitement. The wrangling was continued until the adjournment, without any vote. At the close of the debate, FITCH made an apology to the Senate as a body, but, turning toward DOUGLAS, said he had no further apology to make.

Mr. BROWNING was in the Chair during the exciting session.

The city to-day has been full of rumors pending a duel between DOUGLAS and DAVIS. This is erroneous. There is no ground for a personal issue between these parties. Notes have passed, however, between DOUGLAS and FITCH, with a view to explanations and retractions or a hostile meeting, but the whole matter is in the hands of mutual friends, and in a fair way of amicable adjustment.

The first note was from DOUGLAS to FITCH, demanding a retraction of FITCH's charges of falsehood.

The second note is from FITCH, which specifies the charges, and inquires if he refers to these. If so, FITCH reiterates them.

DOUGLAS replies with a detailed letter, explaining and modifying his language, giving it a construction much less offensive than as originally understood.

FITCH rejoins amicably, and his note will probably close the case.

The correspondence makes no allusion whatever to any declaration that DOUGLAS had failed to prove the charges against Cook, to which he had pledged his honor.

This transaction is looked upon by DOUGLAS' friends as indicative of the fixed purpose of the Administration men to force him to take a back seat if he joins hands with the Democratic organization at all, and they prefer to get him off altogether. It is stated that an early opportunity will be taken in open session to make an issue with DOUGLAS in reference to his statements about individual Illinois appointments, and present proofs of their inaccuracy. The war of the year is evidently just beginning.

Much solicitude is expressed here relative to the election of a Louisiana Senator to succeed BENJAMIN, which comes off to-morrow. There is little doubt that the real purpose of SLIDELL's Thirty-Million bill was to make a little needed capital for the Polkite party in the Legislature, to aid in the election of BENJAMIN, or some other friend of that Senator. This occasion over, the thirty millions, perhaps, are safe.

It is asserted that Mr. WALKER was not rendered over the Deputy-Collectorship, but resigned voluntarily, having filed his resignation in the hands of Mr. BUCHANAN weeks before it took effect. He differs widely with Mr. WALKER in a political one—personal, however, to themselves. It is but just to Mr. WALKER to state that his remark, at which Mr. TAYLOR took offence, was made to the person with whom he was conversing at the time, and he declines intending it for TAYLOR's ears, though he would not retract.

The Committee of Ways and Means will report a bill this week.

FITCH—Transferring a number of articles, including candles, from the lower to the higher schedules.

BENNETT—Reducing the duties on certain articles, including the tariff to the 20cent per week list.

THOMAS—Transferring a number of articles from the free list to the lower schedules.

The Committee on Commerce will report in favor of States levying tonnage and other duties for the improvement of rivers and harbors within their limits.

XXXVth CONGRESS—Second Session.

SENATE....WASHINGTON, Saturday, Jan. 22.

The Senate is not in session.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. MORRIS, of Pennsylvania, presented the resolutions of the Legislature of that State, relating, he said, to a subject now attracting the attention of the country.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, said he did not want to hear it read.

Mr. FLORENCE remarked that the Legislature wished to express its opinion here.

The Clerk commenced reading the resolutions, when Mr. GARNETT, of Virginia, objected.

Mr. BARKSDALE, of Mississippi, said, that when a State asks to be heard the request ought to be granted.

Mr. FLORENCE insisted that gentlemen could vote intelligently as to the disposition of the resolutions only after hearing them read.

Mr. CURRY, of Alabama, asked whether this was a contest between the Pennsylvania Democrats and Republicans.

Mr. FLORENCE replied, that he had nothing to do with the Pennsylvania Republicans as such. He was a Democrat, and was responsible for his acts to no one else, as his speeches and votes would show.

Mr. MORRIS said that in the Senate it was usual to read resolutions of State Legislatures. He did not see why the same course should not be pursued in the House.

Mr. GARNETT inquired whether debate was in order

The Speaker decided that any member has the right to call for the reading.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, trusted Mr. GARNETT would withdraw his objection. For himself he was perfectly willing that the resolutions of any State should be read. It was a courtesy due to a sovereign State.

The resolutions were read instructing the Senators, and requesting the Representatives of Pennsylvania in Congress, to advocate and vote for such a bill as will not only tend to increase the revenue, but afford ample encouragement to the productive interests of the country, more especially on coal and iron, and expressing hearty approval of the President's recommendation of specific duties.

Mr. MCQUEEN of South Carolina, inquired whether these things are in the Cincinnati platform?

Mr. MONGOMERY of Pennsylvania, replied—They are substantially.

The resolutions were ordered to be printed and laid on the table.

On motion of Mr. KUNKEL, of Indiana, a resolution was adopted calling on the President to furnish information in regard to the recent importation of slaves into Georgia or any other State.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill to indemnify the citizens of Alabama and Georgia for losses by Creek hostilities.

The bill was rejected. It involved more than a third of a million of dollars.

A number of private bills were considered, when the House adjourned.

The River Plate.

INTERESTING FROM MONTEVIDEO AND BUENOS AYRES—THE INSURRECTION IN THE ARGENTINE STATES—NEWS RELATIVE TO PARAGUAY.

By the way of England we receive files of River Plate journals to November 30.

The advance squadron of the American Paraguay expedition, consisting of the frigate St. Lawrence, the sloop Falmouth, and the brigs Perry and Bainbridge, had arrived and anchored at Montevideo. The four vessels have hitherto formed, it will be remembered, the usual Brazil squadron.

Commodore FRAZIER expected to await at Montevideo the arrival of Commodore SHUBRICK.

Everything was quiet at Montevideo. R. H. ROBINSON, the new American Vice-Consul received his exequatur Nov. 4.

At Buenos Ayres, the prosecution of persons concerned in the late outbreak at Guardia del Monte was continued. The Railroad to San Fernando occupied the attention of Government. A special session of the Chambers had been summoned to deliberate upon it. On the 16th of November President ALSINA set out on a tour through the northern departments, leaving Dr. FELIPPE LLAVALLOL President ad interim.

The financial condition of Buenos Ayres is unfavorable. A serious deficit is apprehended.

VARQUEZIRA, General Cacique of the State of Buenos Ayres, was murdered recently by an officer of the army, in a drunken brawl, at Bahica Branca.

A rumor had circulated in Montevideo, to the effect that a secret treaty had been negotiated between the United States and Buenos Ayres, with reference to the Paraguay question. The Correo del Plata says:

"The Government of Buenos Ayres has celebrated secret treaties with the United States, in which the leading clauses stipulate that Buenos Ayres shall cede to the United States in the event of war with Paraguay, some point as a depository in its territory; that it shall give the American forces free transit over land or river; and finally that it shall aid its ally in whatever shall conduce to the conquest of Paraguay."

The Buenos Ayrean papers generally deny this report. The National argues that such an arrangement would be desirable; while other prints assert that policy requires a confederation between the governments of Brazil, Bolivia, Chili, Paraguay, etc., to neutralize the influence of the United States.

The Reforma Pacifica, on the other hand, credits the Correo story, and ingeniously ascribes the opportune absence of Dr. ALSINA from the city to a desire to avoid the immediate consequences and discovery of his secret negotiations. The Reforma proceeds to urge the need of a general coalition to exclude the United States from the fluvial States; points to the history of WALKER, the late of Texas and of Greytown, as an indication of what was to be expected from the admission of this dangerous northern influence.

The Grito Paraguayo again—the Grito being a new print just started at Buenos Ayres, by an intimate friend of the Dictator LOPEZ—is only anxious that the expedition may be received in strict neutrality.

The Reforma says: "The Cabinets of the States bordering on Paraguay, giving to the movement its true character, have ordered to the theatre of events its agents or fleets. Brazil sends a squadron of observation to the Parana, and a diplomatic agent to Asuncion. The Oriental State and the Argentine Confederation have tendered their mediation."

A correspondent of the Correo Mercantil, of Rio, writing of the state of matters on the River Plate, says: "The grand question of the day is the Paraguayo American. It is believed that President LOPEZ will prove compliant."

Advices from Asuncion to Nov. 19, while they say, "There is every reason to believe the difficulty will be the subject of arrangement," add that "the Government is preparing to receive the North-American invasion."

From the Argentine Confederation we have dates to Nov. 23. As an offset to the story of a treaty between the United States and Buenos Ayres, there was another to the effect that the Argentine and Brazil had completed a convention, having the conquest of Buenos Ayres in view. There is, however, no reason to credit it.

The insurrection in the province of San Juan was still a prominent topic. At Buenos Ayres it was regarded as the commencement of a movement which was likely to end in the overthrow of Gen. URQUIZA. The latter, on the contrary, regarded the affair as the fruit of Buenos Ayrean intrigue, and was none the better disposed toward that recusant population.

General URQUIZA had written a long letter of condolence to the widow of the murdered General BENAVIDES, taking this view, and promising ample vengeance upon the malefactors.

In the meantime, to throw clearer light upon the course of events in the confederation, we compile the following narrative of the San Juan revolt from the Parana papers:

The Government of San Juan having discovered, as they believed, a conspiracy against its authority, headed by General BENAVIDES, a personal friend and favorite officer of General URQUIZA, arrested the General, and proceeded to his trial agreeably to local laws. General URQUIZA, apprised of the facts, and having reason to know that in the heated partisanship of the distant province BENAVIDES would stand very little chance of justice, caused the usual process to be issued, directing the removal of the cause to the federal tribunals at Parana. The process was addressed to M. GOMEZ, the Governor of San Juan. Upon the refusal of the Gomez Government to comply, the Federal Government dispatched a commission of two leading officials to procure at all costs the surrender of the prisoner. These commissioners also encountered a refusal. There was no other alternative then a resort to compulsion. The troops of the Province of Mendoza were ordered to enter San Juan, and they did so with so great secrecy that on the 23d of October they were enabled to surprise the prison in which BENAVIDES was confined, and to force the building. The people and militia of the city soon, however, rushed to arms, headed by Col. ROSAURIOS, and after a fight of three hours' duration the Government forces were beaten off and obliged to retreat. In the conflict, however, BENAVIDES was unfortunately slain, whether by friends unwittingly, or enemies deliberately, is not known. Each party ascribes the fact to the other.

Since that time Gen. URQUIZA has organized a more completely organized invading force, under the command of Generals PRESENZIRA, PENALOSA, and DE GRATE. The latest intelligence announces that PENALOSA, with seven hundred men, had entered San Juan, and taken position on the Plaza. GOMEZ and his minister were fugitives.

Buenos Ayres newspapers profess to be informed that the States of Salta, Cordova, Tucuman, and San Luis sympathize with the Government of San Juan, and are preparing for a general insurrection.

A serious raid of the Indians into the State of Santa Fé had caused great alarm and much damage. Argentine troops were in pursuit of the invaders. It was also said that troops were being mustered along the boundary of Buenos Ayres.

The Latest Revolution in Mexico—How it is Received by the Liberals.

Through the kindness of a friend, we are furnished with a copy of a Proclamation of the Constitutional Government of Mexico, touching the recent changes at the capital. It shows how small the probability of pacification, short of the triumph of the Liberal cause, there is to be anticipated from this perplexing business:

Benito Juarez, Constitutional President ad interim of the Republic of Mexico to its Inhabitants:

I believe it to be my duty to address you, to induce you to redouble your exertions in order to put a period to anarchy by reestablishing the empire of law, that only guarantee of a lasting peace in our country, that only entrenchment that can resist the spurious ambitions of those who have based their prosperity on its misfortunes, and have selected the ladder of insubordination, to climb to the highest posts of the Republic. Outside of the Constitution, which the nation has adopted by the free and spontaneous vote of its representatives, all is disorder. Every plan that is proposed, whatever engagements may be made, independently of the fundamental law, must inevitably conduct us to anarchy and to the ruin of the republic, let the position and antecedents of the men presenting them be what they may.

Profoundly satisfied of this truth, and in fulfillment of a duty the law imposed upon me, I did not hesitate to recover the constitutional standard which Don IGNACIO COMONFORT had abandoned to the guilty hands of the reaction. I hold that the legal path once forsaken, anarchy must be enthroned among us, because the men of TACUBAYA, without the unerring guide of the law, would be led by their passions from revolution to revolution, by the use of insurrectionary violence, sacrificing at once the honor, the life, and the interests of their fellow countrymen, and the peace of the Republic. And so it has proved. The last events at the capital confirm this melancholy truth, and convince us that with the men who remain in rebellion peace is impossible. Too arrogant to submit to the yoke of authority, if their exorbitant pretensions are not gratified! Betraying their oaths, they destroyed the constitutional order, placing Don IGNACIO COMONFORT in the Presidential chair of the Republic, and a few days afterward rebelling against and deposing him. They elevated in his place Don TEODOSIO LERDO, and a few months later he is unseated by Don MIGUEL ECHEGARAY, who, at the same time, declares himself first magistrate of the nation. Three days pass over, and Don MANUEL ROBLES PEZUELA modifies the plan of ECHEGARAY, making himself chief of the revolt at the capital, and, in his turn, taking the title of President of the Republic, which to-morrow will be torn from him, because this is the lot of the men who ascend to the supreme command by the caprice of factions, and not by the will of the nation.

My duties I consider well these events, and decide whether the Republic often Peace, Liberty and Confidence with such men; resolutely disregarding their evil antecedents and Governors, without the force of the authority to secure obedience.

SOLDIERS: CITIZENS ALL, who have preserved, and still sustain with heroic constancy the constitutional order, follow the track you have chosen, for it is the path of justice and of law. The events at the City of Mexico tell loudly that they were disorder and anarchy, and that you defend the good cause, the cause of law, of justice and of morality.

And you who, governed by a good intention, lend aid to the misguided men at the capital, have compassion upon your unhappy country prostrate at your feet, and unite your energies to those of the legitimate Government, to bring about at once the restoration of peace and concord. BENITO JUAREZ.

PALACE OF THE NATIONAL GOVERNMENT, VERA CRUZ, Dec. 22, 1858.

A Surprise Party—Compliment to the Rev. Dr. Bangs.

On Saturday evening last Irving-place was the scene of a very pleasing and creditable excitement. A number of the personal friends of the venerable Dr. NATHAN BANGS had contributed—in sums of ten dollars each—the very handsome aggregate of $2,000, to be presented to him as a token of their regard and esteem, and it had been agreed among them that the Presentation should take place without previous notice. The parties accordingly met at the residence of the Rev. Dr. MCCLINTOCK, to the number of two or three hundred, and proceeded to the house of Dr. BANGS, in Irving-place, under the lead of Dr. CARLTON, who had placed four hundred five-dollar gold pieces in the interior of a very handsome cane. The visit of this large party was a genuine surprise to the whole family, by whom, however, they were received with a cordial welcome. After congratulations had been exchanged, Bishop JAMES made a brief and pertinent address, leaving the main object of the gathering to be announced by Dr. CARLTON, of the Methodist Book Concern, who addressed the venerable Doctor as follows:

Rev. Dr. BANGS, permit me to assure you that the company here assembled are your warm and devoted friends, and, as such, most heartily and cordially concur in the sentiments expressed by our worthy and respected Bishop. Many of us have known you from our childhood, and we learned to venerate and respect you in early life. For years we have listened to your instructions from the pulpit, and greatly to our profit have we read your books and other productions of your pen; and now, Sir, after a long life of labor and toil as a faithful and devoted minister of the Lord Jesus Christ, we thought it but fitting and proper to present you a trifling testimonial of our personal respect. In connection with my friend, Brother M. F. ODELL, who is always ready in every good word and work, it was agreed a week ago to have this meeting, and no sooner were its objects known, than a hearty response came from every quarter; all said, "We will give the Doctor a hearty greeting;" and the time to procure a suitable representation were left at my disposal; for some time I was at a loss to determine how to use them. I wanted to purchase some article that would be expressive of our friendship, and yet be of service to you; and I must say I was not a little puzzled to determine what disposition to make of them. At length, while walking up town, and becoming somewhat weary, I thought a staff would be a very comfortable thing just then for me, and at that moment the thought entered my mind, a staff for the Doctor is the very thing; and this morning, the first thing I did, was to go in search of the beautiful cane I now hold in my hand. It is an expensive one, and I do not know but that many of you may think I have made an unwise disposition of the funds intrusted to my care; but I assure you that I have acted in accordance with my best judgment in the matter. This staff, ladies and gentlemen, cost $2,000, and you will please look at it, as it was purchased with your money; and here let me say, if you had given me more, I should have invested it all in the same way, such was my enthusiasm at the time to procure a proper staff for our friend the Doctor. We knew him when he was younger, and of noble and upright form and of quick and lively step. We know him now as the venerable man of years strong and vigorous in mind, but feeble in body, and what more expressive gift can be bestowed than that which I have purchased. And now, my dear Doctor, in behalf of these friends here present who contributed the funds to purchase this staff, I present it to you. You can lean upon it for support, for it possesses strength, and though now you may think it but an inferior article, so far as its external appearance is concerned, and wonder that I could not have made a wiser disposition of the value committed to me for your benefit; yet I trust that on a careful examination of its merits, you will find it is worth all it cost. You will receive this token of regard from a few of your friends with the assurance of our best wishes and our most fervent prayers for your future and undying bliss. May the blessing of that God you have served for so many years ever abide with you and yours."

Dr. BANGS listened to this address with marked emotion. In replying to it he thanked his friends for having thus remembered him, and in the spirit natural to his life and character, received the gift as another evidence of the goodness of Divine Providence in his behalf. He stated that he had been fifty-eight years an active minister of the gospel, and in all that time his Heavenly Father had blessed him; that throughout his whole life he had endeavored to the best of his ability to serve his Master, and that now he found himself not forgotten or forsaken but surrounded by friends. Renewing his thanks, he urged that his strength and his emotions both denied him the power for further utterance, and resumed his seat. With a short and appropriate prayer from the Rev. Dr. MCCLINTOCK, the immediate object of the assembled crowd was consummated.

About three hundred persons were present, among whom were a number of distinguished clergymen and prominent citizens; many ladies added their graces to the occasion. While the interesting ceremony of presentation was going on, the ladies had prepared a collation which received the attention of the guests. Thus passed off one of the most pleasant incidents of the new year. The whole affair was characterized by delicacy, by liberality and a Christian spirit.

CITY INTELLIGENCE.

A MOTHER ATTEMPTS TO KILL HERSELF AND CHILD.—A sad case of destitution, despair and attempted suicide by a mother, and murder of her own child, was on Saturday evening brought to the notice of the police. At a late hour in the evening an officer of the Second Ward discovered a woman and her little girl wandering about the streets. Thinking from her hesitating walk that she had perhaps lost her way, he kindly inquired if such was the case. The woman told him that she was without a lodging-place, and that she and her little one had not tasted a mouthful of food since morning. She was taken to the Station-house and temporarily cared for. She and her child were both very scantily dressed, neither having a shawl or a cloak to protect themselves from the bitter cold. The woman gave her name as MARIA BURKE, and after being revived by nourishing food told a sad and—as subsequent investigation proved—a truthful story regarding herself. Her husband is a sailor. He has been absent a long time, and she is fearful that he is dead. To support herself and child she had sold her furniture piece by piece, and pawned her clothing. Unable to procure work, or means to pay her rent, she had been thrust into the street. She walked the streets for hours in the vain hope of obtaining some relief, although she did not ask for aid. At length, becoming desperate, she pawned a coarse woolen blanket, which was wrapped around her child in lieu of a shawl, and with the proceeds bought some laudanum, administered a third of it to her child, and drank the remainder herself. The potion did not prove as potent as she expected, and her intentions were fortunately frustrated. The manners of the unfortunate woman were indicative of some refinement and unusual intelligence. Both mother and child were yesterday given in charge of the Alms-house authorities.

CITY MORTALITY.—The City Inspector reports 411 deaths in this City during the past week; an increase of forty-five over the mortality of the previous week, but a decrease of twelve compared with the corresponding week of last year. As before, a large proportion of the mortality is due to diseases of the lungs and throat—129 having died by those diseases. The next in point of numbers are diseases of the brain and nerves—102 having died by them. There were 15 deaths by croup; 6 by whooping cough; 8 by intemperance. Of the whole number, 91 were men; 62 women; boys, 92; girls, 112. Adults, 174; children, 237; males, 115; females, 108; colored, 12. Their nativity was as follows: Natives of the United States, 270; of Ireland, 65; Germany, 26; England, 5; Scotland, 3; British America, 6; East Indies, 6; France, 1; Wales, 3; Italy, 1; and 1 unknown.

THE BURNS MEMORIAL.—The one hundredth anniversary of the birth of ROBERT BURNS occurs to-morrow, and is to be celebrated with appropriate ceremonies in this country as well as in Scotland. HENRY WARD BEECHER is to deliver an oration upon his life and character, this evening, at the Cooper Institute, and to-morrow evening there is to be a grand banquet at the Astor House. We may appropriately mention here, also, that Mr. MCRAE, of No. 2 Oliver-street, has just issued a very beautiful portrait of BURNS in his Cottage, with his dog at his feet, and himself supposed to be engaged in the composition of the "Cotter's Saturday Night." It is a beautiful engraving from a painting by Sir WILLIAM ALLAN, and cannot fail to be universally welcome at this particular season.

CORRECTION.—The paragraphs which have appeared in our columns, in common with all the other City journals, concerning the detention of a box containing the body of a deceased child at the Hudson River station, have been filled with errors. The statement that the box was marked "dried apples," we are assured by the Coroner, is utterly untrue, and arose from a remark made by the carman who brought it to the station where it was received. There was nothing unusual about the box or its mode of transportation, and nothing which should have made it the occasion for so many erroneous and painful reports.

THE FIRE DEPARTMENT BALL.—The annual ball of the Fire Department, for the benefit of the Widows and Orphans' Fund, will take place at the Academy of Music to-night. There is no fund in the City that better deserves an increase, than the one for the benefit of which the ball is to be given. The former balls given by the Department have resulted in large profits to the fund, and as the preparations for the ball to-night are equal to anything that have been made before, a similar result may safely be anticipated.

OPENING OF THE NEW-YORK JUVENILE ASYLUM.—The new House of Reception of the Juvenile Asylum, No. 71 West Thirteenth-street, will be opened to the public to-day and continue open for inspection until the 29th inst., after which children will be received. The building is four stories high, with an airy basement. It is constructed in the form of a "T," and is 103 feet in depth. In the basement, there is an office, a kitchen, a laundry, a bath-room and a play-room. On the first floor, there are rooms for the family of the Superintendent and assistants, and a large dining-room. On the second floor, front, there are a sitting-room and sleeping rooms for the girls, and in the rear a school-room. On the third floor, front, their is one room 47 feet square, and 14 feet ceiling, which is to be used as a sleeping room for the boys. In the rear is an hospital room that is intended for the accommodation of 20 patients. The upper floor is divided into two rooms which will also be used as sleeping rooms. The building and lots cost about $42,000, about $32,000 of which has been paid.

THE YOUNG MEN'S HEBREW BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION.—This Association was organized for the purpose of furnishing and distributing, gratuitously, food and fuel to the poor several years ago, and from the date of its organization to the present, has been the the means of relieving the wants of many a deserving family that otherwise would have suffered from cold and hunger. The Association gives a ball to-night, at Niblo's, for the purpose of increasing their funds. They should not be disappointed.

FATAL RUPTURE OF A BLOOD VESSEL WHILE COUGHING.—About 9 P. M., on Friday, a man named DANIEL HUBBS, residing at No. 54 Tompkins-street, while in a fit of coughing, ruptured a blood vessel from the effects of which he expired a few moments after. Deceased was a native of England, and fifty-five years of age.

THE WEATHER.—Yesterday the weather was quite cold again. There was considerable ice in the rivers, but not enough to interrupt navigation. Occasionally the ferry-boats found some difficulty in getting to the bridges, owing to the quantity of ice that floated into the slips.

THE HUNGRY ON THE FIVE POINTS.—During the past month the "House of Industry," on the Five Points, gave away, at the house, to those in want, 20,772 meals, at a cost of about $445 12, and those fed in the building; there are some 30 or 40 families partially fed outside. The Directors say they are in want of funds.

Mr. and Mrs. G. VANDENHOFF are meeting with great success in their entertainment from Shakespeare and Dickens that they announce its continuance for this week.

Police Reports.

THE SIXTH WARD MURDER.—SURRENDER OF JAMES GLASS.—James Glass, one of the parties charged by the Jury, in the recent Sixth Ward murder inquisition, as being an accessory in the murder of Mr. Owens, surrendered himself on Saturday to the police authorities. He was lodged in the Tombs to await, with the other prisoners, the action of the Grand Jury in the case. Glass was proprietor of the "Break of Day" saloon, where the alleged murderers repaired after the homicide. The testimony, it will be remembered, indicates Glass as having had a pistol in his hand very soon after the commission of the murder, and passing it to Quinlan,—also charged with being an accessory—with instructions to put it out of the way. Glass was a member of the old Municipal Police, but took sides with Mayor WOOD, after the enactment of the new Police law, and thus failed to secure a reappointment. Glass was a newsboy. His descent from the honorable position of an independent vender of daily papers and a liberal patron of "Butter-cake Dick's," to that of Policeman of the Sixth Ward, and incarceration in a prison on a charge of murder, was rapid. The prisoner assigns as a reason for not sooner delivering himself into custody that, just before the murder, he got into a fight at the Dexter House, in Broome-street, with a Boston pugilist named Price, and was badly beaten. He was afraid to present himself before the Coroner and Jury with a battered countenance, lest his appearance should prejudice the Jury against him. With a view to letting his countenance get into a presentable shape, he dodged off to Philadelphia. On Saturday afternoon he was examined by Coroner JACKMAN. He gave his age as twenty-seven, birthplace New-Jersey, residence No. 478 Pearl-street, and occupation that of tinsmith. To the question what he had to say relative to the charge preferred against him he replied: "I gave myself up to Capt. Dowling, and would have appeared before had not my face been badly bruised in a fight. I know nothing at all about the death of Richard Owens." He deported himself very coolly, and with evident confidence that his incarceration will be brief.

THE ALLEGED SHANGHAI GAME.—Thomas Hadden, charged with getting Daniel McConnell intoxicated, and then shipping him on board a vessel as a seaman, was yesterday arraigned for examination before Justice WELSH. Several witnesses were examined. John Griffin testified that on the 15th of March last, as the ship N. B. Palmer was being hauled out of the dock, Thomas Hadden drove a horse and cart on the end of the pier, and that McConnell was lying on the cart drunk. McConnell was thrust into a small boat, the boat rowed to the vessel's side, and he was then hoisted like a bale of merchandise into the vessel. McConnell lay drunk two or three days after the ship sailed. Thomas Lawler stated that he mustered the crew of the ship N. B. Palmer, and that McConnell, who was among them, was so drunk that he could not give his name. He further testified that Hadden received $25 as the advance wages of McConnell. The testimony of other witnesses was so strongly contradictory to the previous evidence, that the Justice was obliged to dismiss the complaint. A large crowd of Hadden's friends, who had been present during the proceedings, were loud in congratulating the accused on his good fortune in being let off. Most of the friends were noted emigrant runners and sailor boarding-house keepers of questionable morality. The "Shanghai game" is said to be frequently practiced, but it is rarely that the guilty parties are arrested, and when they are they manage to escape punishment by suborning witnesses, and threatening others if they tell the truth. The heavy penalty of ten years' imprisonment is assigned those found guilty of this offence.

RECKLESS DRIVING.—On Saturday afternoon Annie Cox, a young lady residing at No. 166 East Eleventh-street, was run over by a milk wagon driven by Christopher Miller. Her skull was fractured, and she was otherwise so severely injured that her recovery is deemed exceedingly doubtful. A Policeman arrested the driver subsequent to the accident, and he was locked up to await the results of Miss Cox's injuries. The accident is attributed to furious and reckless driving.

BROOKLYN INTELLIGENCE.

NO PREACHING IN MR. BEECHER'S CHURCH.—There were no services in Plymouth Church last evening, in consequence of a slight indisposition of Mr. BEECHER, occasioned by a cold, and a consequent hoarseness, which rendered it "prudent" for him to forego the regular evening discourse. The usual crowd of strangers, some of them from a distance, visited the Church at the hour for meeting, and multitudes went away disappointed.

THE EMERALD BENE

before the date of this letter, which he fell it to be his duty to write to Madrid to inform the head of the Government of the Russian [illegible] and his desire that he had formed in reference to a case with regard to which I was in such entire ignorance that I either had any political intercourse between Lord Wilton and Colonel Dickens." In reply to this communication, Mr. Disraeli wrote an amiable but somewhat inconsistent letter, [illegible] the precise that the Earl had any participation in the proceedings to which he had referred. The Premier replied, pointing out the inconsistency between Mr. Disraeli's disclaimer and certain expressions in his letter. Mr. Disraeli repeated his assurance and [illegible] the Earl of Derby assented, adding:—"It must, however, be distinctly understood that, in disclaiming any participation in the course taken either by Lord Wilton or the Committee of Inquiry, I do not adopt any views respecting it, nor impute any impropriety to [illegible]."

The late fire at Valparaiso Nov. 19, from the accounts which are published in Paris, shows the amount of French capital engaged in that South American seaport, at which, as well as Montevideo Rio and Lima, all military and mercury traffic is in Gallic hands. The insurances (mostly on London offices) are estimated at $1,710,000, of which French houses [illegible].

A letter from Paris in the Independance Belge, represents that Prince Napoleon has stated to Lord Cowley, the British Minister, that the Imperial Government is ready to abandon the present system of negro immigration, provided Great Britain will frankly undertake to assist France in obtaining Coolies for the French Colonies from the British possessions.

The Marquis de Lisle, or Lizy, French Resident at Lisbon, will shortly be replaced, the late disagreeable business of the ship Charles et Georges having no doubt rendered such a step prudent and advisable. It is said that the Marquis de Lizy will be succeeded by M. Fear-Rouzs, who was there in 1852 as Secretary of Legation, and is married to a Portuguese lady.

The Vienna correspondent of the Times forwards a piece of intelligence which is strangely discordant with all the reports long credited respecting the unfriendly disposition of the Russian Government towards Austria. He says that the Russian Envoy has made overtures towards more amicable relations with Austria, representing Count Buol as the chief obstacle towards them. This alleged inclination to a more cordial understanding with Austria is said by the correspondent of the Times to be caused by the apprehensions which the Russian authorities entertain respecting the growing ferment among the peasantry of the Russian provinces.

The Vienna Gazette states that the project of concentrating an imposing force on the frontier of Servia, and the execution of which had been commenced, has been countermanded.

The object of the conspiracy lately discovered at Cracow was to recover the independence of the Republic.

The Paris correspondent of the London News writes, Jan. 5: "There is a rumor in Paris to-day that Milan is in a state of siege. The news seems highly probable, for the few words addressed to M. de Hübner by the Emperor on New-Year's day—which have produced the effect which you know in London, and caused a panic for three days running on the Paris Bourse—must have driven people in Italy nearly wild. The impression that we are on the eve of a general war gains ground immensely. A few days ago it was said—and said truly—in a Belgian journal that war was not believed in except in barracks. That exception had, perhaps, far more importance than was generally attributed to it. I can now assure you beyond a doubt, that whatever turn events may subsequently take, the French "Army of Italy" is at this moment ready to march "on paper." The Commander-in-Chief, the Generals, the aides-de-camp, the staff, [illegible] Now, notwithstanding all these symptoms, my own personal opinion is that a great war is scarcely upon the cards. The Emperor is not strong enough internally to risk the tremendous discontent which would be engendered in France by the catastrophes, the desolation, which would be produced by a war of any long duration. The national vanity is great, and doubtless the news that the tri-colored flag was waving in Lombardy would for a time silence many hostile parties. If Napoleon III. could see his way to a grand military demonstration, ending in a triumph, without any serious opposition, there is no doubt that the movement would be popular. But the "tug" of real war I am sure the nation would have no stomach to stand. There is no doubt, however, that a French army might sweep the Austrians from Italy like chaff before the wind, if no opposing elements came into operation to check their onward course. There is no knowing how far France might be committed by a first, and, possibly, too sanguine step."

The Correspondent of the Manchester Guardian writes: "Not only is Louis Napoleon's position with regard to Italy the most complicated that can be conceived, but it is getting daily worse from two fresh causes. His cousin Prince Napoleon is, through his friends, the Republicans, helping to compromise the Emperor with the Italian patriots, to whom French Socialist newspapers are now constantly saying, 'See, Italy is full of illusions, and relies too much on a French intervention;' and, on the other hand, a serious anxiety is springing up touching Algeria. At the Ministry of War the anxiety is indescribable, and the reports they receive there are very bad indeed. General Mac-Mahon was hurried off at a moment's notice. He was to dine with a person of my acquaintance, and at 5 o'clock he sent a note to his host saying that, instead of dining with him, he must be off by special train, without losing an hour, for Africa. The [illegible] tribes are represented as preaching the 'Holy war' again, and as infuriated against the French. The cause is the substitution for the native Cadis of French legal functionaries, and other similar innovations. There may be some exaggeration in the representations, but the alarm is great, the ill-humor of the Arabs certain, and no paper is allowed to give any version of the matter as yet."

The Abeille du Nord, of St. Petersburg, writing of events prior to the agitating remarks of the French Emperor, furnishes a commentary of European affairs. We read as follows: "The agitation in Italy, as well as the attacks in the French journals against Austria, have given rise to discussions on the possibility of a war in Europe. These reports are chiefly propagated by persons who find alarming intelligence useful for stock jobbing purposes. At the present moment there is no real motive for a war between the principal European Powers. The Italian question is not yet in a condition to render war indispensable to either Austrian or Sardinian policy. The organization of the Danubian Principalities has been effected by a convention forming part of the treaty of Paris of 1856, and its violation by either Turkey or Austria would be dishonorable to both. As for Great Britain, since the present Ministers have been in office she has evinced all questions of foreign policy a degree of disinterestedness and impartiality quite unknown for a long time past. The present British Cabinet has hitherto systematically abstained from all interference with foreign politics; and this line of conduct has given universal satisfaction abroad. It is true that the Cabinet has many weighty affairs in hand, the settlement of which requires its utmost attention. Now, this disposition of the English Ministry with respect to foreign policy is, we think, a sufficient [illegible] England will not lightly enter upon a [illegible] would even be inclined to make [illegible] than to expend some tens of millions. If we look to Prussia, we see that, during the war of 1854, she showed a decided aversion to warlike [illegible] subject, or solely to serve the ambitious [illegible] particular power. As for Austria, she did not desire war in 1855 when she had four allies on her side; and now that some of these late friends might very probably assume a hostile attitude, Austrian policy would necessarily look out for more other [illegible]. France has not yet had breathing time, after the late war. Russia, on her side, being occupied with internal reforms, is not inclined to armed intervention in questions of foreign policy. We therefore see no probability that the existing relations of European powers will be disturbed, unless by unforeseen events, such as political revolutions accompanied by great [illegible]."

NEWS OF THE DAY.

The steamship Europa, of the Cunard line, from Liverpool, Jan. 8, arrived here on Saturday shortly before noon. The news is interesting, though not important. The war panic still prevails, notwithstanding the endeavors of the Paris Moniteur to allay, by a pacific announcement, the general agitation. In Lombardy, the popular uneasiness was unabated. Milan, it was rumored, had been declared in a state of siege; Austrian troops were moving in large bodies into Italy; Sardinia was urging her preparations for a Spring campaign. The Cortes of Spain had had the Cuban paragraphs of the President's Message under discussion, and had ended in a resolution reaffirming the old position, that the mere offer to negotiate on the subject of the purchase would be regarded by Spain as an insult. The statement comes from the East that FEROUK KHAN, the late ambassador at Paris and London, has become the Persian Prime Minister.

The Constitutional President of Mexico, Señor JUAREZ, has issued a proclamation denouncing the movements at the capital, and calling upon all good Mexicans to put down the reactionists, and to restore the capital to the Liberal cause. The document may be read in another column.

Our news from the Rio de la Plata is to Nov. 30. The principal topic of discussion in our files is the coming American expedition, of which one division, consisting of the Brazil squadron, of four vessels, was in rendezvous at Montevideo. The general impression seemed to be, and advices from Asuncion lend it color, that Gen. LOPEZ will depend upon diplomacy to save him. A silly rumor prevailed at Buenos Ayres that the Government of that State had concluded a secret alliance with the United States against Paraguay.

The revolt in the Argentine Province of San Juan had been momentarily repressed, the federal troops occupying the provincial capital. A more general outbreak was, however, seriously apprehended.

The steamer Harriet Lane, of the Paraguay squadron, was at Rio, Dec. 10.

Very little was done by Congress on Saturday. In the House, which was the only branch in session—the Senate having adjourned over from Friday to Monday—resolutions of the Pennsylvania Legislature, relative to the subject of the Tariff, were presented, and, after considerable discussion, were ordered to be printed. The bill to indemnify citizens of Alabama and Georgia for losses by the Creek Indian hostilities, was rejected—thus saving upwards of a third of a million to the Treasury. Private bills were then considered until the adjournment.

On Friday last, in Executive Session, Senators DOUGLAS and FITCH had a wordy difficulty, somewhat personal in its character, which it was apprehended might result in something more serious. The matter, however, is now considered in a fair way of amicable adjustment. The dispatch of our special correspondent sets forth the cause, progress, and effect of the misunderstanding.

Only one branch of the Legislature was in session on Saturday—the Assembly. A bill was introduced in that body providing for the inspection and sealing of gas-meters, for the protection of consumers. The resolution to appoint a committee of three to make inquiries relative to unclaimed deposits in Savings Banks was adopted without debate. An unsuccessful attempt was made to recommit the bill providing for the punishment of the Quarantine incendiaries. The bill providing for the construction of a railroad in Avenue D was reported favorably. Notice was given of intention to introduce a bill providing for the construction of intersectional railroads in this City.

Advices from San Francisco to the 5th inst. have been received, by the arrival of the Quaker City at New-Orleans, from the Isthmus of Tehuantepec. $1,200,000 in treasure is stated to be on the way to this City by the steamer from Aspinwall. The California Legislature convened and organized on the 4th. The Lecompton Democrats have a majority in both Houses. There is no improvement in business.

A dispatch from St. Louis states that Captain MONTGOMERY, whose name has figured so conspicuously in connection with the recent outrages in Kansas, has voluntarily surrendered himself for trial upon the charges preferred against him.

The British ship Mermo, of Liverpool, Capt. TAYS, while on a voyage from Calcutta to London, on the 26th November took fire by spontaneous combustion, in lat. 14° 46' N., lon. 51° 58' W., and was totally destroyed, with her cargo. While the crew were on the point of abandoning their ship in the boats, the clipper-ship Greyfoother, of New-York, Capt. HARFORD, hove in sight, and going to their assistance, rescued the entire crew, nineteen persons in all. The ship then bore up for Pernambuco, where she arrived and landed them on the 9th December. From this port they embarked on board the ship Tyne, and arrived at Southampton on the 6th January. The Greyfoother was dispatched hence early in November, with freight and passengers, by L. H. SIMPSON & Co.

Capt. MAURY and others of the fillibusters of the schooner Susan, have been examined before the United States Commissioner at Mobile, on the charges of obstructing United States officers in the discharge of their duties, and violating the revenue laws, and have been held to bail for their appearance for trial in February in the sum of $2,000 each.

General RENAU, of Cuban notoriety, has "turned up" again. Havana papers of the 19th contain a statement to the effect that he has offered Gen. CONCHA fifteen millions of dollars to declare the independence of Cuba. Fifteen millions is a large sum to refuse.

The wife of a poor sailor who is at sea, being unable to pay her rent, was, on Saturday night, together with her little girl four years of age, turned out into the street. Delirious with hunger and despair she ran to a pawnbroker's shop and pawned her shawl for a few cents, bought some provisions, and, after giving some to the child, swallowed the remainder. Fortunately the person failed to accomplish its expected work. The heartless woman and her child were found by a policeman, wandering through the streets, and kindly taken to the nearest station-house, whence they were removed yesterday to the Almshouse.

On Saturday evening there was a rather unusual sort of "surprise party" at the house of LEMUEL BANGS, in Irving-place, when a party of some three hundred persons, of both sexes, presented themselves to the Rev. Doctor BANGS, of the Methodist Church, and gave him a token of their esteem in the shape of a purse which contained two thousand dollars in five-dollar gold coins. It was proposed by a few friends of the venerable preacher to present him a sum not exceeding five hundred dollars, to which no one was allowed to contribute more than ten dollars; but the contributions poured in so unexpectedly fast that they soon amounted to the above sum.

On Saturday morning, JAMES [illegible] was charged with being an accessory in the late murder of RICHARD OWENS, in Elm-street, and delivered him into the police authorities. He was committed by Coroner Thomas, to await, with the other accused parties, the action of the Grand Jury. According to his own statement, he fled to [illegible] after the murder, in order to keep out of the way until [illegible] the excitement had subsided. He received a letter while at Boston, urging him to return and give the [illegible] all the information in his power, [illegible] the Grand Jury in the discharge of their [illegible] duties.

The prisoners from the Court of Oyer and Terminer, who were sentenced on Saturday with a few minutes' interval between each sentence, and those "suspended of sentence," WILLIAM JONES, the forger, was sent up to the Penitentiary for six months; GEORGE KANE, for a similar offence was remanded till next term. JOHN QUEENNEL, a boy, convicted of burglary in the third degree, had judgment suspended over him, and was allowed to leave the Court with his employer, who promised to receive him into his service again. MARY BRANNAN was also dismissed on promise of future good behavior. Her offence was larceny. APPLETON OAKSMITH, convicted of assault and battery on Mr. COPPLAN, the engraver, was dealt with in the same lenient manner, Judge RUSSELL deciding that the assault, that of beating and kicking an Government Officer applying for money due him, was justifiable. PATRICK KENO, also convicted of assault and battery, was sentenced to the Penitentiary for six months. The notorious old counterfeiter, GEORGE BOWER, who has already served a long term in the State Prison, was remanded till February for sentence.

The application made by WOOD, EDDY & Co., of the Georgia State Lottery, to have the charges against them decided in the Special Sessions, has not been successful, a majority of the Justices of that Court deciding, on Saturday, that the papers should be returned to the General Sessions. The penalty would have been much lighter in the former Court, hence their wish to have the cases tried there.

An important decision on the law of divorce will be found under the head of Law Reports.

The sales of Cotton, on Saturday, comprised 4,000 bales at full prices. Flour was in active request, and was dearer. Wheat and Corn, Hay, Hops, Seeds, Raisins, Coffee and Whisky were quiet. Spices were more sought after, as also was Pork. Sugars and Molasses, Naval Stores, Linseed Oil, Tallow and Rice were in good demand. Freights were less active, with 585 vessels of all classes in port.

Italy and the State of Europe.

The machinations of Austria in Italy are rapidly culminating towards consequences which became inevitable long ago. Not content with holding the North of Italy in subjection, by force of the treaties of 1815, Austria has for the last twenty years been steadily endeavoring to subjugate Central Italy also, in the face of those treaties. So long as her advance was to be met only by the vacillating policy of England, or the timid diplomacy of France under LOUIS PHILIPPE, the Apostolic Empire prospered. She established her influence, and opened the way for her armies in the Duchies, Tuscany and the States of the Church. The Revolutions of 1848 materially aided her by paralyzing all regular government throughout the Peninsula, and nothing but the advent to power in France of LOUIS NAPOLEON, and his determined intervention in Rome, prevented her from fastening herself as firmly, in 1849, upon the ruins of Roman Republicanism, as upon the masquerade of Tuscan independence. The last ten years have been consumed in a struggle not the less steady and sustained, because silently and subtly conducted, between Austria and France, for supremacy to the South of the Alps. In this struggle Austria has won the complete control of the Papal Government and of the Crown of Naples; while France has kept the nine points she seized in occupying the Roman territory; has successfully alienated England, Austria's firmest ally, and the savior of the Neapolitan monarchy, from both of those Powers; has elevated Sardinia to the first rank among the second-class States of Europe; has given to the Italian flag a recognized position in the front of a great European war, and to the Italian nationality an open voice at a general Congress of European States. In January, 1848, Austria apparently held the destinies of Italy in her hand. In January, 1859, France has but to lift her sword, in signal of war, to precipitate the whole of Northern and Central Italy upon the Austrian dominions, under the leadership of an army proud of the rank already conceded to it;—confident in the moral support of Europe, and certain in the last resort to see its Imperial antagonist crushed between the advancing masses of Russia and of France.

The words addressed by NAPOLEON III. on New-Year's day to the Austrian Minister were doubtless intended to open the eyes of all Europe to this position of affairs. Seven days were suffered to elapse after their utterance, before the Moniteur officially declared that "there was nothing in the diplomatic relations of France to justify the fears provoked by certain alarming reports current with the public." In those seven days the work of the Emperor's words had been done. The credit of Austria had been shaken on every Bourse in Europe, and her negotiations for a new loan, absolutely necessary in the present state of her finances to enable her to meet a sudden emergency of conflict, effectually interrupted. England had been startled into a public recognition of the fact that she is bound hand and foot from the possibility of interference to save Austria from the storm now gathering over her. Germany, already alarmed at the scarcely-concealed enmity of Russia against the greatest of German States, was notified that France stands side by side with the Czar, and prefers the friendship of an honorable antagonist, with whom peace has been honorably made, to the alliance of a lukewarm and deceitful supporter, such as Austria proved herself to be to the Western Alliance through the Eastern war; and Italy, above all, has been touched into flame by the hope of immediate Imperial sympathy with her in any rising she may make upon her Austrian oppressor.

All this no smooth speeches of the Moniteur can now undo, as the Emperor very well knew when he allowed the said smooth speeches to be made. He can now stand calmly by, with his tremendous army well in hand, and await the events whose coming he has thus proclaimed, and, by proclaiming, invited. He already sees Austria hastily retreating from her attempted advance upon Servia, and abandoning the eastern frontiers of her empire to concentrate her forces upon Lombardy; and quietly moves the southeastern division of his own army nearer to the Italian frontier, as thirty thousand fresh Austrian troops are marched across the Alps.

From all parts of Austrian Italy the intimations of coming mischief thicken upon the Government of Vienna. The University of Pavia can only be reopened when its corps of professors shall have been strengthened by the rather unacademical addition of 700 soldiers, with four pieces of artillery. From Modena and Cremona, from Milan and Padua, rumors multiply of popular demonstrations against the Austrian authorities, mingled with stories graver still, which indicate the existence of serious disaffection among the Imperial troops, and the possibility that the game on which Austria has so long relied of playing off one conquered people against another, keeping Italy in subjection with Hungarian hussars, and Hungary in slavery with Italian bayonets, may at last be nearly played out.

It is hardly possible, indeed, that more than two or three months should pass by without bringing the present position of affairs in Europe to an issue of open war. That England and Prussia will use their utmost efforts to delay the outbreak of hostilities there can be no doubt, but neither of these Powers occupies at present a position sufficiently commanding to prevent the consummation upon which NAPOLEON III. has been signing ever since NAPOLEON I. came into power in France, and which rests upon the solid basis of a great nationality in European politics. In 1856, England and Prussia combined to check Russia in Europe, in 1859, Russia and France have achieved a right to treat the arrangements of 1815 as practically null and void, while England, by the instincts of her people, and Prussia, by the perils of her position, will be forced to acquiesce in the new policy of their imperial confederates. The Anglo-Prussian opposition may perhaps prevent any interference with Austria north of the Alps. It can do nothing to avert, or even to arrest the downfall of Austrian power in Italy, and should that downfall entail a great Continental war between Austria and France, it is not easy to imagine, on what pretext England, at least, can be brought into the contest otherwise than as the ally of NAPOLEON; while any attempt on the part of Prussia to support her ancient rival, Austria, in the name and on the behalf of "German nationality," would bring Russia into the conflict, and with Russia such vast and various eventualities, as it is neither necessary nor desirable now to speculate upon.

All present appearances go to show that NAPOLEON III. is finally on the point of assuming that active leadership in the remodeling of the European system which has again and again been offered to England, but which her short-sighted statesmen have trifled with and thrown away as often as events have put it within their reach.

Claims on Foreign Governments.

The plethora of the money market, about which gentlemen who are fond of putting figures into incomprehensible columns talk and write so much, is apt to be rather aggravated than otherwise in the event of the payment of one tithe or one-twentieth part of the claims which some of our citizens have formally made against foreign Governments. Formidable as these demands are, however, they serve rather to recall the stories of the liberal Genii in the "Arabian Nights," or the relenting father with the sausage-like purse in the farces of twenty years ago, than to suggest the probability of the early recovery of the sums claimed. It may well be considered doubtful, for example, if Great Britain is prepared immediately to pay over to the United States, for account of Captain WM. WEBSTER, the little sum of six millions and a half of dollars, which that modest mariner exacts as "indemnity for lands purchased from a chief of New-Zealand, and of which he was dispossessed by English officers." It is to be presumed that Captain WILLIAM WEBSTER would scarcely have permitted himself to advance this trifling pretension, without having in his pocket the title-deed granted by the native chief, who would appear to have been a decided "bear" in the real-estate market; and we should be glad to learn how the "consideration" in that document compares with the six millions and a half which the Captain, in laudable rivalry of Mr. ASTOR, seeks to obtain from the coffers of John Bull. If there be any real foundation for this claim, Captain WEBSTER must, we imagine, be considerably past the prime of life, since it would be difficult to understand how, at any period after the year 1769, a New Zealand chief could have been authorized to dispose of six millions' worth of land to anybody.

Far stronger ground is offered by Mr. ROBERT A. PARRISH, for a much more modest claim. Mr. P. (capital P. of course) demands fifteen millions of francs—after all, this is only three millions of dollars—from France, on the strength of "a verbal agreement" with the Government of that country to the effect that the said sum should be paid to Mr. P. on his demonstrating the "existence of a gold field similar to that of California, and accessible to the French arms." Mr. P. alleges the performance of this service, and claims of France the payment of the money—which France most unaccountably refuses. Where the gold-field similar to that of California exists, without any previous claimant, is not stated; but in connection with the ideas which are said to have been recently agitating certain minds in Europe, as to the feasibility of communicating with the moon, it is not difficult to guess at the location of Mr. P.'s El Dorado. Of course, in the case of any sublunary discovery of the same kind, Mr. P. would have given his own Government the benefit of his first disclosures. On the other hand, it is impossible to speak with too much severity of the conduct of France in the premises. It is too well known to need comment that nowhere are forms—notarial and otherwise—so rigidly observed in all matters of contract, as they are in that empire; and it is therefore deplorable that, on the first departure from this principle, the verbal contract—probably the first ever made by a French Government—entered into by the Minister of Finance, and "verbally" confirmed by the Emperor himself, should be so ruthlessly disregarded.

Against Spain there are said to be a variety of claims, growing out of affairs with the Island of Cuba. For such an announcement as this the public will no doubt have been fully prepared, nor will the sympathetic mind be surprised to see these demands multiplying with intense rapidity during the official term of Mr. BUCHANAN.

On Nicaragua there are claims presented through our Government, growing, singularly enough, out of the American bombardment of Greytown. We having knocked down the dwellings and shops of our own citizens in that quarter, politely insist on Nicaragua's paying for the damage. That State will, per contra, have to claim on us, in return, for the sums which she may so pay, and for her sake we sincerely hope she may get them, in that event. It may possibly be advanced by Nicaragua that she had no rights of sovereignty at the time of the bombardment, an argument which might tend somewhat to the complication of the question.

Two gentlemen claim on foreign Governments for alleged failure to satisfy certain contracts said to have been fulfilled by the claimants. Thus: One Mr. PERKINS, of Massachusetts, wants $385,000 for arms furnished to Russia during the Crimean War, and a certain JOHN REYNES demands payment from Turkey for money due on the building of vessels of war at Constantinople. It appears to us that our Government will have enough to do if it has to insist on the settlement of disputes between debtor and creditor, and that the foreign contract business with our citizens will be apt to fall off considerably if such Governmental interference were to become customary.

In addition to the cases which we have here alluded to in brief detail, however, there are scores of others, embracing claims on every civilized Government, from England down to Uruguay, and against a variety of uncivilized Governments, from Naples down to the Fegee Islands—the negotiation of which will furnish the gigantic mind of Mr. BUCHANAN with congenial occupation for the remainder of his political life. Once get that worthy man earnestly employed on the business of State Claims, and the Senate of Commissioners which we have referred to, hereinbefore, it is confident to need that "the Nation of Sarcens have another full explanation," and that we have only our claim against Salvador.

It will have been observed that, as a sort of counter-stroke against the President's schemes on Cuba, a gentleman from Illinois has moved a resolution in the House of Representatives to the effect that it is necessary for us to acquire Canada by treaty. Out of the amount which we should probably have to pay for that flourishing colony, it would not be difficult for Great Britain to settle Capt. WEBSTER's claim for six and a-half millions; but we do not see why the Russian possessions in America were not likewise included in the resolution, if only to afford that Government the means of settling comfortably with Mr. PARRISH.

Spain and the Sale of Cuba.

The President of the United States has two accredited organs. His social and personal predilections and associations find expression through the congenial columns of the New-York Herald; his political opinions and intentions are published to an expectant world through the Washington Union. Both of these Aucadian sheets have assented to that in asking for thirty millions of dollars for the purchase of Cuba, the President did not mean to imply that he personally wished to purchase that Island, but simply to find out whether the Island was for sale, and whether the United States wished him to buy it.

We are bound to accept the Presidential plans as these respectable journals explain them: and we must therefore be allowed to express the opinion that the sentiments of the country on this subject may be fairly got at without so heavy an expenditure. The people of the United States, who are the intended purchasers in this intended transaction, do not wish Mr. BUCHANAN to purchase Cuba for them. They prefer to intrust that negotiation, should it ever become feasible, to somebody who will negotiate it at once more decently and more sagaciously, and put the property to better use when once acquired.

At the same time we find that the intended vendor and actual proprietor of Cuba, the Kingdom of Spain, is more than ever indisposed to the sale, under the auspices which at present attend it. We publish, to-day, the pith of a calm, dignified and resolute discussion—debate it can hardly be called—in the Spanish Cortes, on the subject of Mr. BUCHANAN's proposition, which settles this part of the question. The silly and insolent language of the President has not unjustly aroused the most indignant feeling in Spain; and we owe it much more to the intelligence of the Spanish Deputies, than to the diplomatic tact of Mr. BUCHANAN, that the United States have not been involved in the obloquy provoked by the Message of their accidental Chief Magistrate.

The Spanish Representatives have set a good example to the American Congress at Washington. Without extravagant displays of ungrammatical rhapsody, they have come forward to lay partisan differences a sacrifice on the altar of a common nationality; and, while asserting the honor of Spain in the most dignified language, they have retained enough of self-command to do justice to the people as distinguished from the President of the United States. They recognize in the language of the Message the extravagance of a ruined political rake who has thrown away the inheritance of a life in the follies of a single official term, and who has earned with the contempt of his own party the distrust of the whole nation. They appeal from the decrepit Administration of Mr. BUCHANAN to the sober common sense of the American people. We believe they will not have so appealed in vain. Mr. BUCHANAN has lost his prestige and his leadership. He will neither receive his thirty millions, nor his "discretionary power" to make fools or something worse of the people over whom he for the moment presides. He will neither persuade us into a senseless war with Spain, nor deprive us of all that would make the acquisition of Cuba desirable, by cajoling us into bartering for that noble Island the honor, the peace, the good name and the permanent prosperity of the United States.

Had Spain retaliated upon the President by language as intemperate as his own, she might have irritated the people of the United States into a thoughtless and angry support of his superannuated policy. Her calm and discriminating criticism upon his headlong pamphleteering is the severest blow that could have been dealt to the faction of which he is the head; and the best possible disposal that could have been made of his wild, selfish and impracticable schemes.

THE CAPRICES OF THE SEASON.—Two weeks ago to-day the weather was colder than it had been before in the City in seventy years, unless MERIAM and FAHRENHEIT were guilty of most gross misrepresentations; but on Thursday last a halcyon visitor in the shape of a butterfly was fluttering about our editorial rooms upon its gaudy wings, under the delusion that it was the season of buds and blossoms, so soft and Spring-like was the atmosphere. Last night again the weather was more suitable for Polar bears than Summer butterflies, and the mercury was down in the neighborhood of zero. But this changeable weather has its advantages; it not only affords a topic of conversation to a good many well meaning people who would not know what to talk about, but it is good for trade. The cold weather affords an opportunity for the furriers to get off their Winter's stock, and the fine weather induces a vast number of idle people to go out shopping who would otherwise be compelled to stay at home.

DECIDEDLY COOL AND QUIET.—We learn from the Journal of Commerce that Mr. MORTON, Ex-City Inspector, has urged Mayor TIEMANN to sanction the continuance of the street cleaning and the other sanitary labors connected with the City Inspector's department. But the Mayor declines to accept any advice from Mr. MORTON on that subject. And very properly. Mr. MORTON is the dog in the manger who prevents the important duties belonging to the City Inspector from being properly discharged. The Mayor refuses to recognize him as the legal occupant of the office, but he is unable to remove him because the Corporation Counsel has decided that he has a right to hold on to the place until his successor shall be appointed by the sanction of the Board of Aldermen. The Board of Aldermen have their own reasons for refusing to confirm the nominee of the Mayor, and so there is a dead lock in the most important department connected with the Government of the City. As the weather is very cold, and there is no great danger of the spread of an infectious disease during the next two months, it may be better for the true interests of the City that affairs should remain at a dead lock in the City

Without an opera, save the colored one at Mr. WOOD's, and with scarcely a variation in the bills of the large theatres, the few entertainments that offer a change in this dullness during the week deserve, and will undoubtedly obtain, more than an average share of public support. Foremost amongst these are the Broadway and Burton's Theatre. Free from the enervating influence of "a transcendent success," these establishments struggle bravely for the wreath of public life. Under the joint management of Mr. BURT, the first-named entertainment has already received a portion of its former popularity. Energy and a deep-bought knowledge of what the public needs, enable Mr. BURT to provide the right kind of bill for his patrons. Something of the same sort is displayed by the present lessees of Mr. BURTON's Theatre. In spite of all sorts of difficulties they have succeeded in the first gift and enforcement of attractiveness—keeping the house open. For the present we are to have an actor of the public—whom others—Mr. C. G. COMPTON, and, of course, a Yankee—[illegible] Miss Kate DEAN. These actors appear to aspire to a variety of light pieces. A piece is advertised which seems a little piquantistic. It is called "Our Female American Cousin." There is a bare possibility that the piece and its title have been suggested by our male relation in another hemisphere. Imitation is the sincerest homage. Mr. Tod WATSON may not succeed, but we doubt if Miss Kate DEAN will.

Once a year, and usually at this time, there is a rage for Equestrian performances. The regular institutions are becoming more and more manifest. At NIBLO's beautiful theatre we have already the promise of an excellent troupe, with DAN RICE and his famous trained animals as adjuncts. The experiment last season justifies its repetition. There is a very large class of persons who cannot conveniently reach the east side of the City, and would not even if they could. Equestrianism consequently has no claim its way to Broadway, and surely it needs but hand to find a better place than NIBLO's.

But in this case there will be no monopoly, for Mr. EDDY, of the Broadway, has engaged a quadrupedal star—a certain Courser named "White Cloud"—who makes his appearance to-night in "his original character" of Horse to Mr. EDDY's "Monopole." Here is a combination which promises a double entertainment. To fill the bill to overflowing, MAZEPPA's tragedy of "Bertram" will also be performed.

At the Bowery Theatre the star sisters LUCILLE and HATTIE WEMYSS are playing a successful engagement, and repeating several of their most popular pieces. At the National Theatre a couple of transatlantic revivals are announced—a pantomime on the good old plan, and the "Sea of Ice." The latter piece was first produced at this house, and with a splendor of mise-en-scene rarely witnessed. Subsequently it enjoyed a success at another house. Revivals are the order of the day; there can scarcely be a doubt about the success of this one. At Barnum's Museum an infant opera troupe—The Holman Family—appears every afternoon and evening of the present week. In the way of Ethiopian Minstrelsy everything that the public needs is supplied with lavish liberality by Mr. WOOD.

A very acceptable addition to the Winter-evening enjoyments of the City has been made by Mr. and Mrs. VANDENHOFF. Their readings from SHAKESPEARE and DICKENS have attracted good audiences. Entertainments are provided for Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday. We may refer also to the Palace Gardens as another side place of recreation. The Wren Family are here.

ARTHUR NAPOLEON's concerts on Friday and Saturday were fine entertainments, the young pianist playing with more than his usual skill. A grand fantasia, from the "Huguenots," was introduced for the first time—a work of immense difficulty, composed by ARTHUR NAPOLEON, and played faultlessly. It is his most effective piece. Miss ANNA VAN sang several pieces with great ability. Her voice is an excellent soprano, her method good, her style bold and sparkling. We have not often heard a concert singer of more promise. Miss CECILIA PIGNE also sang one or two pieces with good taste. ARTHUR NAPOLEON now leaves us for the Provinces. We bespeak for him a kindly reception. He is certainly the most astonishing prodigy of the day.

In the way of music the greatest treat in the future is Mr. RICHARD STORRS's "Hiawatha." The Mendelssohn Union (which by the way will give a grand performance of ROSSINI's "Moses in Egypt," on Thursday next,) has the work in preparation. There is but one opinion of its merits. The Academy of Music has been selected for its performance, with an orchestra of fifty good soloists, powerful chorus, and Mrs. MATILDA HEROS STORRS to recite the poem. The work is the topic of conversation in musical circles.

The New-London Slaver.

WHAT SHE HAS ON BOARD.

The bark Laurens, which was seized by the United States Marshal at New-London on Thursday last, is still in custody. The vessel formerly belonged to the estate of PERKINS & SMITH. Some time in November an offer was made of $6,500 for the vessel, and she was sold, the transfer being made to a Boston ship broker, who was the purchaser. He stated that he was buying for other parties, who intended to fit her out as a whaler. Captain PARSONS, one of the trustees who sold the ship, and who is an old hand at the business of fitting out whalers, discovered, when the preparations for the voyage began, that those having the vessel in hand displayed a total ignorance of what was requisite for such a voyage. There was only whaling gear sufficient to excite suspicion that it was put on board as a blind. A large quantity of stone ballast was taken in, and extensive provision of water casks was made; the steerage was whitewashed and painted, and an entirely novel mode of fitting whalers was adopted. In short, it became perfectly apparent to the old whalers of New-London that, whatever she might be, going a-whaling was not the trade she was intended for. On the Sunday previous to her seizure, a sloop arrived from New-York bringing her stores, which consisted, among other things, of 120 barrels of bread, 20 barrels of rice, 30 boxes codfish, 2,000 pounds; 100 boxes herrings, 4 barrels whisky, and a large supply of luxuries, such as tongues, two tierces of sardines, preserved meats, in cans. There were 24 bags of meal, and 14 of them were much heavier than the rest, creating the suspicion that there was a large-sized cat under the meal. There was only one try-kettle. The singular conduct of those having charge of the vessel, finally led to consultations between Capt. PARSONS and the Revenue officers of the port, and the cutter Campbell was held in readiness to head her off if she attempted to put to sea. The U. S. Marshal was informed of the circumstances, and a strict watch was kept upon the vessel's movements. Everything was now apparently in readiness, but there was no crew. The vessel, however, was hauled into the stream on Wednesday evening, with the avowed intention of sailing the next morning. The Captain could not obtain a clearance. On Thursday afternoon, about 5 o'clock, she was boarded by a boat from the revenue cutter Campbell, in charge of Lieutenant CARSON. In the boat were Collector MORRIS, United States District-Attorney SANFORD, Marshal BACON, and City Sheriff DURRANT. They found aboard the vessel only three persons; one "boat-steerer," a cook and steward. Neither the Captain nor any one to represent the owners was to be found. The Government officials at once took possession of the bark to await the result of an examination into the case. The three men found on board were not detained as prisoners, but were allowed to go on shore. Lieutenant CARSON was put in charge of the vessel.

A strong impression prevails in New-London that the Laurens was bound to the coast of Africa, after slaves. She is an old vessel, and, judging from her build, by no means a fast sailer. Taking a hint from the Wanderer, which succeeded so well in her "pleasure excursion," it is supposed this vessel was intended to adopt the "whaling" dodge, and with her whale-boats hanging upon the cranes, and a general "greasy look," she expected to pass along unmolested with her hold full of negroes.

DYSPEPSIA—WHAT IS IT? HOW CURED.

DYSPEPSIA is our national disease—weak stomach, feeble digestion, distress after eating, costive habit, bilious condition. How many suffer with it, and its attendant symptoms of low spirits, bad taste, coated tongue, obstipated head, and attacks of headache! Yet, how few know how to cure it! Generally, because the bowels are constipated, resort is had to cathartics or laxatives. But such a condition was never cured by cathartics, whose only office is to weaken the digestion, and impair the integrity of the entire assimilative system.

But HUMPHREYS' HOMŒOPATHIC DYSPEPSIA PILLS—a simple medicated sugar—dispel—have cured hundreds of the worst and most obstinate cases. This is done simply by improving the tone and restoring the integrity of the digestive organs, from which result good appetite, regular habits, a clear head and buoyant spirits. Such a medicine is a gem, and only requires to be known to be appreciated.

Price, 25 cents per box, with directions. Six boxes, $1.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

From the New-York Commercial Advertiser.

[illegible] Yankee.—When, a month since, Bonner announced the Everett papers, he myster[illegible] of journalistic enterprise, which [illegible] than any former coup d'main. The world of his million and a half readers and the other twenty-three and a half millions who are not his readers (more's the pity) were struck with astonishment at this announcement, and marvellously greedy what he intended to do. Perhaps Lord Palmerston was engaged for a series of articles on Lalapolin; perhaps the Shah of Persia was to write an essay on roses and nightingales, or the Sultan of Turkey discuss the Woman's Rights movement. These plans may be maturing. No one can tell what Bonner's possible is, since he has accomplished the great feat of yoking together James Gordon Bennett, Horace Greeley and Henry J. Raymond, as harmonious contributors to his paper. Some of these gentlemen, or their journals for them, ventured unpleasant observations when it was announced that "Everett writes for the Ledger." Bonner sprung his trap on them, and the placards now say: "Bennett writes for the Ledger," "Greeley writes for the Ledger," "Raymond writes for the Ledger." These gentlemen have fallen into line with the other captives, and are led behind Bonner's triumphal car. Some say this is a veritable proof of the prophecy that "the lion shall lie down with the lamb," and others, as innocently as the boys at the show, ask the keeper "Which is the lion and which is the lamb?"—To which Bonner can cautiously reply, "Buy the Ledger—you have paid your money and you has your choice." Mr. Bennett contributes four "fugitive" poems, that have lain hidden in his portfolio, unclaimed by any extradition clause, for thirty or forty years, and until the statute has ceased to run. Mr. Greeley writes a sensible article to young men, who might wish to seek fortune in the City; and Mr. Raymond furnishes a personal reminiscence of a visit to Jane Eyre. But the Ledger will be out on Monday; and when the cry grows "heaver, clearer than before," rush out, buy a copy, and peruse it at your leisure.

From the Evening Post.

BONNER'S NEXT CARD—A UNION OF JOURNALISTS.—Bonner is evidently determined not to let the public forget him; he has barely played out one trump before another is produced equally calculated to awaken surprise. Having, by his donation of $10,000 to the Mount Vernon Fund, allured Mr. Everett into the ranks of his contributors, he has tried his seductive art, with the same success, on subjects still less susceptible. In other words, Mr. Bonner's paper, to be issued on Monday next, will contain contributions from three of the prominent rival journalists of the New-York daily Press—namely, Bennett, of the Herald; Greeley, of the Tribune, and Raymond, of the Times, who have been induced for at least one week, to lay aside their long-standing hostilities, and write for the New-York Ledger. Bennett furnishes four poems—one of them an effusion of youthful sentiment, entitled "An Angel's Smile," another an apostrophe "To Mary Ann;" Greeley, a characteristic article in prose, urging unemployed young men to leave the City and go to farming; Raymond, an interesting reminiscence of foreign travel, relating the incidents of "A Visit to the Home of Jane Eyre." Mr. Bonner is determined to give variety and ability to his columns, at any price.

From the Williamsburg Daily Times.

BONNER ARE HIS LABORS.—There's no use talking, the coming man who was so long in showing himself has at last come, and his name is Bonner. Bonner is the man of the age, the Napoleon of advertisers, and the monopolizer of talent. It will be seen by his advertisement in to-day's paper that, not content with securing Everett, he has obtained contributions for his next issue from Bennett of the Herald, (fancy Bennett writing poetry,) Greeley of the Tribune, and Raymond of the Times. The force of enterprise can go further go, unless, indeed, Bonner should contract to get a love tale from James Buchanan.

From the New-York Dispatch.

"There is nothing new under the sun," is an old saying which has been received by men without a murmur or thought of dispute for ages; but if the presence of these gentlemen in the columns of the Ledger as contributors, isn't something new for even old Sol to look on, then he must, in the course of his journeyings through space, have seen most wonderful combinations of men and things—combinations which the earth until now has never afforded.

From the Paterson (N. J.) Daily Guardian.

ALL THE TALENTS.—It is said that the next number of the New-York Ledger will contain contributions from Bennett of the Herald, Greeley of the Tribune, and Raymond of the Times. We would suggest that Mr. Bonner change the title of his paper to that of the Happy Family. Which of the prophets foretold the day when the lion and the lamb should lie down together?

From the Poughkeepsie Daily Press.

THE LEDGER.—The number of this celebrated and excellent Journal—the New-York Ledger—for the 5th of February will possess unusual attractions. In addition to its previous contributors, the number for that date will contain choice articles from the pens of the three great journalists of New-York—Messrs. Greeley, Bennett and Raymond.

From the Albany Knicke-bocker.

BONNER'S NEXT CARD.—Next week's Ledger is to contain articles from Greeley, Bennett and Raymond. Bennett furnishes four poems—one of them an effusion of youthful sentiment, entitled "An Angel's Smile," another an apostrophe "To Mary Ann;" Greeley, a characteristic article in prose, urging unemployed young men to leave the city and go to farming; Raymond, an interesting reminiscence of foreign travel, relating to incidents of "A Visit to the Home of Jane Eyre."

From the Philadelphia (Penn.) Argus.

THE NEW-YORK LEDGER.—We do not envy the publisher of the New-York Ledger his remarkable success, for he richly deserves it all, unprecedented as it is in the history of journalism. His energy and tact, his great business qualifications, his astonishing enterprise, all go to make him a wonder in the publishing line. Neither pains nor expense are spared to make his paper deserving of the great circulation it has secured.

From the Boston Atlas and Bee.

BONNER STILL LIVES.—Mr. Bonner has a very singular and attractive new feature in the New-York Ledger. Articles contributed by James Gordon Bennett, of the New-York Herald, Horace Greeley, of the Tribune, and Henry J. Raymond, of the Times, are in one paper. This is laying the press under contribution in a novel way, and we doubt not the Ledger will be more valuable for it.

From the Providence Journal.

WHAT WILL BONNER BE NEXT!—This is the question from week to week. Before one novelty is exhausted another is started. The forthcoming number of the Ledger is to contain articles from James Gordon Bennett, of the New-York Herald, Horace Greeley, of the Tribune, and Henry J. Raymond, of the Times. What is coming next?

From the Boston Daily Advertiser.

A NEW FEATURE.—The leading editors of the New-York Tribune, Times and Herald have contributions in the number of the New-York Ledger which will come to hand next week. Mr. Bennett furnishes four pieces of poetry, one of which is called "The Angel's Smile." There will be several other attractive features in the next number.

From the Boston Post.

James Gordon Bennett as a poet, Horace Greeley as a farmer, and Raymond as a traveler, will appear in the next Ledger, says the New-York Post. * * One of Mr. Bennett's poems will be entitled "An Angel's Smile," in hexameters.

From the Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

Bonner has a new novelty—the quaintest of all—namely, contributions from Greeley of the Tribune, Bennett of the Herald, and Raymond of the Times. Think of James Gordon Bennett writing poetry for a literary paper!

From the Boston Daily Ledger.

BONNER'S LAST AND GREATEST.—The public have hardly recovered from their astonishment at the enlistment by Bonner, of the New-York Ledger, of Edward Everett in the ranks of journalists, when the Napoleon of advertisers furnishes them with new matter for wonder. Look at his announcement in another column of three new contributors, these being no less distinguished personages than James Gordon Bennett, of the New-York Herald, Horace Greeley, of the Tribune, and Raymond of the Times. What Bonner will accomplish next it is impossible to guess within any reasonable compass, but if anything more wonderful than bringing these three rival journalists together in the Ledger can be accomplished, Bonner is the man to do it. What comes next?

From the Newark (N. J.) Journal.

Bonner, the indefatigable publisher of the Ledger, is about to bring out a new combination of stars. James Gordon Bennett, of the Herald, Horace Greeley, of the Tribune, and H. J. Raymond, of the Times, are each to furnish articles for the Ledger of Feb. 5. Bennett contributes poems, Greeley advice, and Raymond a sketch.

From the Sun.

Seeing is believing. We have seen the Ledger, and the fact is confirmed. The lions and lambs are to lie down together next week. The Ledger is to be their pasturing ground, and Bonner the child that leads them.

From the Brooklyn Star.

It will be seen by our paper to-day, that the editors of the Tribune, Times and Herald are to appear in the New-York Ledger next week. The great fun of the thing is not in the value of the matter thus produced, but in the combination and the wonder what Bonner will do next.

From the Philadelphia Daily Press.

Bonner has secured for his next number of the New York Ledger original articles from the chief editors of the Herald, Times and Tribune. Bennett gives some original poems.

From the Philadelphia United States Gazette.

It will be seen, by an advertisement in another column, that the indefatigable Bonner, of the New-York Ledger, is increasing the attractiveness of his paper by securing more talent.

From the New-York Constellation.

"BEWILDERING."—We have really a liking and admiration for Mr. Robert Bonner, of the New-York Ledger. We consider him a man of decided genius. His executive faculty is splendid. It is truly astonishing that a man, commencing as he did, without means, with no help or assistance from any quarter, sustained only by his own confidence, indomitable will, energy and perseverance, should have achieved so immense, so brilliant a success. There is but one adjective which expresses our idea of him—bewildering. How he has advertised! [illegible] of dollars [illegible] and thousands of dollars [illegible] and by [illegible] with [illegible] and [illegible] Alaska! And how he will continue to advertise! What genius! What pluck—not only public pluck, but real true pluck of genius. Truly they say the whole out of everybody else's wits. Not content with gaining a very large fortune, he desires to enhance, to increase it, to make it perfectly Astorian; he must become the Baron Rothschild of the Press. He has been as victorious as Cæsar, and not content with overcoming all creation by his last coup d'état, he is already sighing for new worlds to conquer.

That idea of giving ten thousand dollars to the Mount Vernon Fund, and at the same time acquiring Edward Everett, was worthy of Napoleon. It was a movement of astonishing magnificence. It was sublime. None but a first-rate manager could ever have conceived or executed it.

It surprised the public; it took the community by storm. It authorized the issuing of half a million copies of the Ledger, and, what is more, it sold them. People in the streets, people in houses, people in places of public resort, people in cars—all the world and his wife and children, bought the paper with intense curiosity, and read it with insane delight. We were astonished. In fact, the force of astonishment can no further go. We do not think that whatever Mr. Bonner may do—and we are in momentary expectation of his doing something stunning—he can add to more utterly amazed than we have been. Henceforth—though the ghost of Shakespeare were to be engaged at a thousand dollars a line to write new tragedies for the Ledger, as much better than Hamlet and Othello, as they are than the libretti of Italian operas—we can be roused to no more vivid an emotion than a languid surprise.

It is well for the dunces to cry humbug! But what humbug is there in making three thousand dollars a week? What humbug in having gained a circulation for a single paper larger than that of all the other weeklies of New-York put together—half a dozen dozen dailies included? What humbug in engaging the very first minds of the country, as regular contributors; inclusive of the most accomplished orator, the most beautiful writer, and the most devoted patriot of his day? What humbug in gaining the good will of any number of yellow-citizens and the laudations of all the journals, inclusive of the Constellation? Is it not very "bewildering?"

Verily, to use a phrase of the vulgar, it is "nothing else." And are we disturbed by any emotions of envy at such unparalleled triumph? Not a bit of it. We are, on the contrary, rejoiced. We should be truly glad to learn that the name of Mr. Bonner's subscribers was Legion—

Such as the North
Poured never from her frozen loins, to cross
Rhene and the Danan, and that in 1860, when the census-takers of the United States shall go about to number the tribes, they shall find every man, woman, and child, of every creed and color, each holding in his or her hand the last number of the New-York Ledger. Glory, then, to the bewildering Bonner! We bestow upon him the Persian's benediction: "May he live a thousand years; may his shadow never be less!"

From the Boston Atlas and Bee.

LETTERS BY THE BUSHEL.—A New-York correspondent of the Philadelphia Press says: Happening into the Ledger office yesterday—the Ledger office is now the hub of the literary world, as Boston State-house (according to the creed of the Bostonians) is the hub of the universe—I was surprised to see piled up on a desk, before an industrious-looking clerk, some six or seven hundred letters, which he was opening and taking money from for the Ledger. On Monday last over nine hundred letters were received, containing upwards of three thousand seven hundred dollars. These were from mail subscribers—not from agents who buy by the hundred; the latter are supplied exclusively through Rose & Tousey. Mr. Bonner's letters from the Post-office far exceed those received by any one man or firm in America, and probably exceed those received by any one establishment in Europe.

From the Philadelphia Press.

THE TWO CONS.—The proposition that the distinguished Howell Cobb, Secretary of the Treasury, and Sylvanus Cobb, Romancer of the New-York Ledger, should exchange places, has been so extensively circulated by the newspaper Press, that an approximation to the sentiment of the country in regard to it may now be reached; and, after a careful survey of the premises, we are satisfied that, so far as regards the idea of putting Howell out of the Treasury Department and Sylvanus in it, is concerned, it would command the enthusiastic approval of the country, for it is generally conceded that any change would be for the better. But, unfortunately, on the other hand, it seems that Mr. Bonner and the million readers of the Ledger are decidedly hostile to the proposition, because they distrust Howell's capacity to entertain them as agreeably as their present favorite, and on this account it is to be feared that the arrangement will not be effected.

From the Mobile Daily Advertiser.

NEW-YORK LEDGER.—We have received an advance copy of the New-York Ledger for January 1, 1859, which, whether in regard to the literary matter it contains, or to the style in which it is typographically presented, is certainly creditable to the American Press. The number of the Ledger before us is, in all respects, superior to any previous number of the paper which has fallen under our notice, and cannot fail to be received with pleasure by its three hundred thousand readers.

From the Winchester (Va.) Republican.

MOUNT VERNON.—The "Mount Vernon Papers," which the Hon. Edward Everett is now contributing to the columns of the New-York Ledger, are assuming a highly interesting character—the third article relating to the house in Boston where Franklin was born—and is characterized by a dry humor which the distinguished writer knows how to apply so well when occasion serves. It is proposed that the readers of the Ledger, estimated at one million, should subscribe half a dollar toward the purchase of Mount Vernon, and for convenience, Mr. Everett suggests that two persons thus inclined should remit one dollar, with stamp inclosed, to his address at Boston, in acknowledgment of which a handsomely engraved receipt will be returned to each. There is certainly no more patriotic way to devote so small a sum.

From the New-York United States Journal.

Few successes in literature can compare with that of the New-York Ledger. Against competition which would have crushed any less sagaciously engineered journal, in the face of almost every phase of invidious stricture, it has gone on, leaping by tens of thousands into a circulation which is now truly gigantic—said to be nearly 500,000 copies weekly! Such success could not have been won had the Ledger possessed no other excellencies than attach to other "popular weeklies;" it came legitimately as the fruits of honest, intelligent and deserving enterprise. While such pens cater to its columns as now constitute its literary reserve, it is useless for any paper to hope to cope with it in popularity. While managed by its present proprietor, it is useless for invidious publishers to prognosticate any falling away of its influence or success. It promises to become a feature of American literature. Vive la Bonner!

From the Columbus, (Ga.) Times.

NEW-YORK LEDGER—MOUNT VERNON PAPERS.—The Hon. Edward Everett, the great orator and scholar, has commenced his series of "Mount Vernon Papers" in the New-York Ledger. He will write weekly, and will not confine himself exclusively to the discussion of the purchase of Mount Vernon. So great a renown has the Hon. Edward Everett, and so eager are the intelligent readers all over the country to peruse his writings, that nearly a half million copies of the first number of the Ledger has been published, and "ten steam presses have been at work day and night for the past two weeks" to supply the demand. It is an era in journalism when statesmen like Lord Palmerston and Disraeli and the Hon. Edward Everett take up the pen. It is no letting down for them—they know well the power of the Press—they respect its high calling—they have seen that the "pen is mightier than the sword." It is a matter of congratulation with the friends of Robert Bonner, Esq., the proprietor of the Ledger, that he is reaping a fortune from this enterprise. He well deserves it for his energy and perseverance.

From the Trenton (N. J.) True American.

THE NEW-YORK LEDGER.—This week's number of the Ledger is out, containing the third number of the Mount Vernon papers. In this article Mr. Everett makes some remarks on the crooked and narrow streets of Boston, as a preface to some highly interesting observations on the house in which Benjamin Franklin spent his boyhood, and the cause and necessity of its demolition. He informs us, however, that everything connected with it that was worth preserving has been saved, for Boston fully appreciates the memory of her "most illustrious native son," "the philosopher, statesman and patriot, who shone among the brightest lights of the eighteenth century." The Ledger is printed in an unexceptionable style, and contains, besides the Mount Vernon papers, a large variety of interesting matter. Its proprietor, Mr. Bonner, has evinced an almost unparalleled enterprise in its management, the reward of which he is now reaping, having secured for it the largest circulation ever attained by a weekly paper in the United States.

From the Rochester Daily Democrat.

THE NEW-YORK LEDGER.—The number of Mount Vernon papers in the New-York Ledger, by the way, is a great step forward in journalistic enterprise, and shows that the newspaper is to be the great teacher and educator of the masses of men. If Mr. Bonner correctly gives the thoughts that shall do people honestly, he can speak from now, as with the power of a million of tongues. No preacher on earth ever addressed such a multitude of hearers and of such diverse characters. We begin to feel that the power of the Press is no vain boast, when we know that half a million of sheets are sent out weekly from one office, laden with the great thoughts of the greatest minds of the age.

From the Albany (N. Y.) Journal.

THE NEW-YORK LEDGER.—The number of Bonner's Ledger for this week had been received. * * * * No. 3 of the Everett papers is an intensely interesting article on Mulberry Street, which alone is worth a year's subscription to the Ledger; but Mr. Everett's learned yet popular articles by no means exhaust the entire literary talent which shines through this paper. There are contributions from the gifted and pure-minded Mrs. Sigourney, the peerless American writer, Grace Greenwood, Prentice, to say nothing of the fine poems from the highest acknowledged American sources. It is too late in the day, we believe, to talk of Edward Everett, or any other American scholar, as degrading his position by becoming a contributor to the popular Press. The example of Addison, the Author of English classic literature, and his city companion, in making a newspaper the medium of communication with the public, has been followed by the leading minds of all European countries since that day; and we may say, without hardly a possibility of being contradicted, that nearly all of the distinguished men of our country, in every subject of distinction have, at some period of their lives, been contributors to the popular Press. Indeed, very few men of sense or intelligence are apt to underrate the importance of this mode of communication with the public; and to specify familiar instances of the fact would only occupy our space to prove what is well known and obvious. We have not been able to view Mr. Everett's course as a writer for the Ledger with any of those feelings of distrust and regret which are expressed by a few of our respected contemporaries. Our first impulse on reading the announcement of the engagement between Messrs. Everett and Bonner, was that of surprise; but it was only transient and momentary, and this feeling soon gave way to one of admiration at the shrewdness exhibited by the proprietor of the Ledger, and the frank patriotism of Mr. Everett, who, in the spirit of true American republicanism, probably deems nothing human beneath him which takes hold of the popular heart of humanity and reaches the ear of the people. The Ledger, by its immense circulation among all classes and in all sections of the country, answered this requisition, and Mr. Everett, in his pursuit of the noble object to which he has devoted whole years of his valuable life, accepted the liberal terms offered him; and in a few words the result of his decision may be stated: The sum of $10,000 is secured to the purchase of Mount Vernon; the Ledger is improved by Mr. Everett's fine essays, and the taste and knowledge of the million readers of that paper correspondingly improved. These papers will not decrease the popularity of their author with this people; neither will he be led to regard the people with less favor from his weekly communication with them. All parties concerned are benefited; nobody is injured. Bonner makes money and reputation; the Mount Vernon Association put a handsome sum in their purse; the people are profited, and everybody reads the Ledger. This is a great country, and a Republican country, too.

THE NEW-YORK LEDGER.—The commencement of the publication of Mr. Everett's Mount Vernon Papers in the New-York Ledger has deservedly inaugurated a new era of prosperity for the already prosperous Bonner. Regarded either as a master stroke of business enterprise, or as the effect of patriotic feeling, his contributions to the Mount Vernon Fund, in consideration of the literary contributions of Mr. Everett to his paper, is worthy of all praise, and of the substantial reward which he will certainly receive from the people of the Union.

Personally, our day of light reading is long since past; and we have, therefore, never made ourselves acquainted with the merits, or defects—either or both, as it may be—of the Ledger. We are, however, of opinion that Mr. Bonner is too honest and good a man to harm his readers knowingly for any consideration of profit.

But however all this may be, we are henceforth numbered among the regular readers of the Ledger, or at least of that part of it contributed by Edward Everett; for we admire his beautiful thoughts and equally beautiful periods too much ever to let them pass by without enjoying them. His easy learning, his entire command of the best expression of which language is capable; his excellent taste in the selection, arrangement and treatment of his subjects, and the wondrous skill with which he gives to his most elaborate works all the smooth charm of spontaneity, all unite to make up a combination of graces yet unattained by any other living man. No man who has read can forget the sweet light shed by his learning, taste and fancy on the vast variety of usually dry subjects treated by him in his address at the inauguration of the Dudley Observatory. How vivid and instructive was his narrative of the early expedition of Henry Hudson and the settlement of Albany; and how glorious his description of the heavens in the early morning! We remember having seen not long ago a report of a short and seemingly off-hand speech made by him when unexpectedly called on at an agricultural show. Remarking that he was unprepared for a speech, having been pressed, as it were, into the service, he entered easily and naturally into a beautifully clear history of our disputes and late war with Great Britain, in consequence of the forcible impressment of our seamen by British armed vessels. Foreign as the subject was from the matters immediately under the eyes and in the minds of his hearers, they must surely for the time have forgotten all else in proud contemplation of the picture of national glory vividly painted in burning words by him who had himself been part of the great battle for national rights which he thus rehearsed.

If Such is a slight instance of the intellectual and moral influence which the tongue and pen of Everett exert in their unceasing labor of patriotism. That influence is always used for justice and right, for religion and charity; and we can lose nothing, but profit much, by placing ourselves within its beneficent circle. Apart, then, from all thought of aiding the enterprising Bonner, who deserves all he has made and is going to make from his publication, all should purchase the Ledger, who, by the reading of the Mount Vernon Papers, would place themselves in mental association with the most accomplished of Americans.

From the Mount Vernon Record.

The annals of literature, affluent as they are in striking illustrations of unwearied labor and high-minded devotion to lofty purposes, do not supply any parallel to that remarkable instance of patriotic and generous self-dedication recently afforded by Mr. Everett, in favor of nationalizing, in perpetuity, the home and grave of Washington—of him, the Father of his Country, who was

"Good without effort, great without a foe."

After having successfully filled the highest offices in the Union and his native State—having represented his country with eminent distinction in a foreign land—having achieved an illustrious reputation in every branch of literature which he touched—having won the merited eulogy of being the first of living orators—having retired from the toils of public life, in the fond expectation of closing his brilliant career among the life-long friends whom he had made, the relations who love as much as they honor him, and the books whose accumulated wisdom have passed into and become a part of his inquiring and capacious mind, he suddenly emerged from his retirement, just when its sweets had become familiar to him, and devoted himself, with all the sagacity of matured years, and all the energy of opening manhood, to one great concluding purpose. What drew such a man from the lettered ease which he had won by years of active labor? What placed him once more before the eyes of the millions who inhabit this mighty country? It was neither the love of gain nor the lust of power—neither the allurements of vanity nor the temptations of ambition—it was simply a high and ennobling desire to aid in that patriotic purpose, to accomplish which the "Mount Vernon Ladies' Association" was happily organized, to obtain for his countrymen of the present day, and for all succeeding time, perpetual property in and possession of the hallowed spot which holds all that was mortal of George Washington.

With this view Mr. Everett freely gave the sanction of his name and the fruition of his mind to one great purpose. He has traversed the South, as well as the North, reminding immense congregations of attentive and delighted auditors how greatly Washington merited all the honors which a grateful country could invest him with, and devoting the pecuniary results of this far-extended travel and teaching to the fund from which the purchase of Washington's home and tomb is to be made. In this labor he has indeed been as unwearied as successful. He has addressed public assemblies in various parts of the Union more than one hundred times, and has traveled thousands of miles. The object for which he did all this has not only been greatly benefited in a pecuniary sense, but his example has effected much; for when such a man as Edward Everett—scholar, statesman, orator and patriot—devotes himself to such a purpose, what man that [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
